Credit Points 10

Coordinator David Burchell (https://directory.westernsydney.edu.au/search/name/David Burchell/)

Description Early Modern European culture was underpinned by religious conceptions of nature, society and morality. The Modern West sees itself as having emancipated itself from these religious underpinnings, and as being grounded in human naturalistic and scientific values. This subject traces the transition from the first of these conceptions to the second, through politics, philosophy, culture and science.
